FOR RACE AND NATION

Electors give their verdict on the state of the nation after 11 years of Mrs. Thatcher...

A SHAMBLES!

ON THURSDAY, the 22nd March, the voters of Mid-Staffordshire delivered to Margaret Thatcher's Government what had been coming to them for a long long time. In the worst Tory election disaster for 55 years, they turned what was a massive majority (14,654 in 1987) into a rout of the Government whereby the Labour candidate coasted home by 9,449 votes. This was well and truly Mrs. Thatcher's 'come-uppance' — a massive rejection by the British people so thoroughly deserved but so long delayed. It was the electors verdict on the utter and total shambles that the 'Iron Lady' has made of Britain in her 11 years of office.

Of course, the immediate factors that prompted this anti-Government landslide were the Poll Tax, the appallingly high mortgage rates and the lamentable state of the health service — all things that hit the people where they feel them most: in the effect on their personal material well-being. This is how all great political convulsions occur, however more important may be the other issues underlying them.

But these glaring sores are merely the tips of an iceberg of incompetence and calamity with which the Thatcher Government is associated in the eyes of an increasing majority of British people. In nearly 11 years of disastrous leadership this Government has...

(1)...largely destroyed our nation's once powerful and internationally envied manufacturing capacity, by its obdurate allegiance to the principles of the 'free market' economy which have let in a flood of imports, wasted British capital on a series of overseas investments when it was direly needed at home and handed much of what is left of the country's factories into the laps of foreign owners.

(2)...presided over an alarming collapse of law and order, an unprecedented increase of crime and a decline of public and private morals as bad as any in the modern world.

(3)...continued to keep the floodgates open for the unending waves of non-white immigrants, despite all manner of public postures designed to give the opposite impression — the latest instance of this being the plan to grant right of abode here to upwards of a quarter of a million Hong Kong Chinese.

(4)...adopted towards the bombers and the gunmen of the IRA a policy of continual appeasement and surrender, barely concealed by the pious words of condemnation uttered on the occasion of each fresh atrocity.

(5)...slowly and steadily, but gradually, sold Britain out to Europe by a series of concessions of national sovereignty thinly masked by postures of resistance to the scheme for a European federal state.

INCOMPETENCE

Over the most recent issue leading to widespread public anger, that of the hated Poll Tax, the Government has demonstrated, more than anything else, its crass incompetence. What condemns the tax is not so much its lack of theoretical merit as its hopeless impracticability, given the problems of administering and enforcing it, and given the public mood prevailing at the time of its adoption. The very complexity of the tax means that it will cost much more to operate, and that cost will be thrown onto the people who have to pay it — so that the average citizen is going to be worse off rather than better off. It has hit far more folk than it has benefitted, and many of those worst hit are the people least able to afford the extra financial burden. A government which, beset as it already is with a mountain of economic and other problems, creates yet another problem for itself by the introduction of such a universally detested measure — such a government has got to be composed of idiots who have lost all touch with reality.

WORRIED — AND WITH REASON

The tormented frown worn by the Prime Minister in this picture is no surprise. At the Mid-Staffordshire by-election last month the voters delivered the Tories the worst hammering they had had for half a century. Mrs. Thatcher knows that she is a deeply unpopular leader of a deeply unpopular government. Even many members of her own party are now saying she should go.

THE PEOPLE'S FURY

This anti-Poll Tax demo was one of many that took place in and outside town halls all over the country last month, releasing the pent-up fury of a people that has had enough. It is true that many of the organisers of these demos were extreme left-wingers with their own axes to grind against the Government, but in this cause they will willingly joined by thousands of people of no strong socialist leanings. In effect, Mrs. Thatcher, through her disastrous policies, has played right into her enemies' hands.

LAUGHING

Labour boss Neil Kinnock, shown here, has every reason to look pleased with himself. Not by virtue of his own merits, nor by those of his party, he now stands to achieve his big ambition to take over Britain — due solely to the folly and ineptitude of the Thatcher Government.

GOVERNMENT INCOMPETENCE GIVES GREEN LIGHT FOR MAYHEM

HOWEVER much the Tories are now trying to pass the buck, the ructions that have greeted the Poll Tax are the final outcome of their own bungling and weakness. The mayhem that broke loose with the introduction of the tax last month is the final comment on the true state of Britain after 11 years of Tory rule.

The Tories have bungled the economy, deliberately allowing the Japs and other foreigners to wipe out a huge part of Britain's manufacturing capability. As a result, we are now running a massive trade deficit, mostly on imports of goods that until only a short time ago we were fully capable of producing for ourselves.

Under the regime of free-moving international money to which the Tories have tied our country, the only way to stem the outflow of funds — which is putting constant pressure on the nation's reserves of foreign currency — is to whack up interest rates on borrowed money to monstrous levels. Only thus can international speculators be persuaded not to shift their invested cash out of Britain and overseas to countries where rates are higher.

In this way the people of Britain were already being squeezed from every direction when the Poll Tax was launched.

Two views may be possible about the principle of replacing the rates, an unevenly calculated levy on property, with a tax per head which spreads the cost of local services more evenly across the whole community, making sure that everybody pays something. But because former Tory Environment Secretary Nicholas Ridley and his ministry got their sums wrong, the Poll Tax now turns out in practice to be a new burden on the British people which is neither moderate in its scale nor fair in its workings.

Whilst the size of the subsidy to be paid by the state towards part of the cost of local goverment was fixed, the Poll Tax set by local councils from which the remainder was to be paid was open-ended, since Ridley and Co. had completely underrated the total bill by overlooking a number of big costs, which as a result will now have to be met entirely from Poll Tax contributions. The outcome is that local residents are to be stung for sums way over what the Government had estimated, and far above the old rates bill which householders had been paying.

No wonder then that the Tories got such a thrashing in Mid-Staffs. No wonder too that, with public opinion swinging against the Government in this way, the sort of left-wing rentamobs which have run riot in the country felt that they had a green light to do so.

Tory propagandists have tried to deflect popular feeling away from their Poll Tax blunders by focusing public attention on the violence of this red rabble and its Labour godfathers in parliament and on local councils.

But this won't do.

It won't do because it is primarily Tory incompetence that has provoked the massive wave of national anger now being shown against the tax. The red rabble is simply reaping where the Tories have sown.

Why should we pay for this vendetta?

SOMETIME in the next few weeks, the House of Lords is going to debate a bill, already passed by the Commons, which will legislate to enable British courts to try people for alleged crimes committed in foreign countries more than forty-five years ago and under laws that did not exist at the time, either in those countries or in Britain itself.

The persons who stand accused of these crimes are elderly Eastern Europeans, now thought to be living out their last years in this country, and who served with or in suppport of German forces in World War II.

These men are believed to have come here from the Baltic States, the Ukraine and Byelorussia. Their motives for collaborating with the Germans in the war were almost certainly patriotic ones — they believed, rightly or wrongly, that by such collaboration they could win their countries' freedom from Soviet rule.

Three years ago, our then Home Secretary Douglas Hurd was approached by a delegation of Jews headed by one Rabbi Marvin Hier from Los Angeles. The delegation urged upon him that Britain should change its laws to enable these alleged 'war criminals' to be prosecuted, and that the Home Office should institute a series of investigations with a view to compiling sufficient evidence to bring them to court for that purpose.

HIS TRADE IS VENGEANCE
This is Rabbi Marvin Hier. Apparently he carries such clout with our Government that he has been able to persuade it to allocate huge resources to a witch-hunt against alleged 'war criminals' that are far more urgently needed to deal with today's crime-wave

Mr. Hurd at the time quite rightly responded by saying that he doubted whether such a scheme could be practicable, given the great distance of time involved and the difficulty of producing reliable evidence, and also given the established laws and traditions of justice of this country.

But the Jews persevered, and in due course, by processes of 'persuasion' at which we can only guess, they induced the Home Office to change its mind. A bill was put to the House of Commons and passed by 273 votes to 60 at its second reading. It is now due to go the Lords, where it is expected it will encounter considerable opposition.

OUTRAGE

We believe that this whole affair is an absolute outrage.

As Mr. Hurd at first maintained (before he and his colleagues had their arms twisted), the fact that the 'crimes' in question were alleged to have been committed way back in the days of World War II made it utterly impracticable for them to be the subject of 'trials' now, over 45 years later. How on earth could the memories of either witnesses or defendants focus with any certainty on events or personages so long ago? How could such men be identified by those who last saw them in their comparative youth? The idea is ridiculous.

And why anyway should this country change its laws, and adopt procedures that run entirely contrary to its ancient traditions of justice, to accommodate the demands of a pack of arrogant and pushy foreigners bent only on vengeance?

These are the thoughts that will be in the minds of most fair-thinking Britons. But they were not the thoughts of our 'representatives' in parliament — as can be seen by the large majority by which they approved the bill!

AREN'T THERE MORE URGENT TASKS FOR BRITAIN'S CRIME-FIGHTERS THAN THE HUNTING DOWN OF OLD NAZIS?

Lord Hailsham, our former Lord Chancellor, is a man with whom this paper has very often disagreed, but he was absolutely right when he gave his opinion of this vendetta. In an interview with the Sunday Express last month he said:-

> "I am against it. I think it is a mistake. It raises the fundamental question of how you can assure these people a fair trial.
> "Supposing you were accused of something which happened 50 years ago.
> "How can you go into the witness box and remember enough to say with conviction 'I am innocent of this offence because...'?
> "Or, equally, how can a witness go into court and remember enough to say with certainty that he or she remembers clearly what happened all that time ago?"

THE COST

But this is not all. We have been reliably informed that each case to be investigated as part of this 'war crimes' witchhunt will cost at least a full £1 million. Possibly up to seventy such cases are to be investigated. This makes the cost of the whole operation absolutely astronomical.

Vast armies of police detectives and their retinues of secretaries, clerks, researchers and telephonists, together with droves of solicitors, barristers and members of the judiciary — all with their assistants also, are to be employed dealing with these cases. This apart, when the cases come to trial our court-rooms, already with their schedules clogged far beyond normal capacity, will require to be taken over for months on end — and perhaps longer — to hear the cases involved.

And all this at a time when Britain is trying to cope with an unprecedented crime-wave of a very up-to-date nature, involving not old men who may or may not have ill-treated people in wartime nearly half a century ago but muggers, rapists, murderers and drug barons who are operating today!

Lord Hailsham has not failed to take note of this too, for he has said that to prosecute war criminals "will divert enormous amounts of manpower, resources and judges."

Precisely. So why is Britain being made to put up with all this nonsense?

We deplore war crimes as much as anybody. We deeply rue the fact that modern war, as exemplified by the conflicts of the 20th century, has lost the chivalry and gallantry of the warfare of old, when knightly generosity was shown to adversaries, and when only the minimum violence necessary to settle the issue was used.

But we are against all war crimes and war criminals, whether these be on the Axis side in World War II or on the Allied side in that war. We are against crimes like the bombing of Dresden and Hiroshima, just as much as against real crimes, where they were actually committed, by the Germans or Japanese.

No side came out of World War II completely smelling of roses. But were we to weigh down the whole legal system bringing prosecutions against everyone thought to have acted brutally in that war it would be ridiculous. We just don't have the resources to do it, and it was all far too long ago anyway.

So again we ask: why is this being done?

What mysterious powers are able to prevail on our own Government, and politicians of both sides of the House of Commons, which induce them to turn Britain's ancient laws upside down and then allocate huge resources to an old vendetta over events in Europe which are badly needed to fight crime which is taking place here and now?

HAILSHAM
Former Lord Chancellor, he has denounced scheme as being against principles of natural justice

Perhaps when we have the answer to that question, we will know the answer to many others which crucially affect this country in our times!

Why keep our troops in Germany?

ON THE OCCASION of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's visit to Britain last month, our Prime Minister engaged in her now regular practice of lecturing to other nations how they should decide their own affairs.

If the Germans are to be allowed to unite, Mr. T. told the Chancellor, Britain and the United States must keep their forces on German soil.

This is perfect nonsense. There is not the slightest reason to keep our forces (55,000 men) stationed in Germany anymore. Their presence there is a huge cost to this country and they are defending no vital British interest whatever. The Second World War has been over for 45 years. We should bring our troops home!

A SHAMBLES!

Prime Minister would be disastrous for Britain. We maintained that view through the honeymoon years in which many millions still held onto hopes that 'Maggie' was on the right course and would eventually deliver the goods. It gives us no pleasure now to say that events have proved us completely and resoundingly right.

At the same time we have maintained our view that Britain can hope for nothing in the way of a viable alternative from the Labour Party. Neil Kinnock's party remains what it has been for a long time: a gang of way-out left-wingers who, just for the moment and entirely for reasons of tactical convenience, have dropped a few of their wilder postures. Put Kinnock & Co. in at the next general election, and you can be quite sure that the country will remain in every bit as big a mess as it now is under the Tories.

What Mrs. Thatcher has in fact done by her succession of follies is accomplish the impossible: she has made Neil Kinnock a credible candidate for the premiership of the nation and made his rag-bag of a party favourites to win the next election. No wonder Neil is laughing!

There is only one way out of the shambles and the chaos that 11 years of Mrs. Thatcher have bequeathed to us — and it is not the Labour way.

The way out of the shambles and the chaos lies in the total rejection of all the parties of parliament that have contributed to it over the past half-century or more, and then the embracing of a new political movement and creed which will completely revolutionise life in this country, bringing strength, order, efficiency and national dynamism to British affairs.

This is the way offered by the British National Party. Examine what we stand for at the bottom of the back page. Aren't these the things that you believe in? If so, join us and help us achieve them while there is still time!

MUGGED!

Scandal of the Fayeds' takeover of Harrods reveals Britain as the world's patsy

THE EXPOSURE in a Government report of the falsehood and trickery used by the Egyptian Fayed brothers to grab control of the House of Fraser, the company that owns Harrods, Britain's most prestigious department store, certainly shows one thing. It has now become a piece of cake to take Britain to the cleaners for even her most prized assets.

These shifty aliens were able to convince the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Fair Trading back in 1985, during their take-over battle for the House of Fraser with the Lonrho Corporation, that they were fit persons to own Harrods, which holds a royal warrant from the Queen, on the basis of what now turns out to have been a pack of lies. The new DTI report on the affair says that the Fayeds "repeatedly lied to the authorities about their family background, their early business life and their wealth" so as to get the clearance they needed to buy up the store. What is more, the City, the Government and every other arm of Britain's ruling establishment seem to have to have taken them at face value.

COCK-AND-BULL STORY

To begin with, the Oriental threesome had to make the DTI believe that the £615 million sum needed for the purchase, which by that time was held in various Swiss and London bank accounts in their name, was really and truly their own money. To this end, they spun a yarn about being members of a wealthy old Egyptian family that had been in business for 100 years. According to this cock-and-bull story, gullibly promoted alike by bakers Kleinwort Benson and City legal agents Herbert Smith, and swallowed by the Office for Fair Trading and the DTI, the Fayeds were supposed to be worth more than a billion dollars. They were said to have all sorts of international interests, among other things in shipping, oil and luxury hotels.

But investigations revealed that they are in fact, as far as can be made out, the sons of a schoolteacher from the backstreets of Alexandria who was as poor as a church mouse!

They even produced fake birth certificates to back up their con-trick against the British authorities.

As for their legendary 'wealth', it has turned out to be just that — legendary!

It seems that some of their vaunted businesses could hardly even be described as going concerns. These include two roll-on, roll-off ferries plying the Mediterranean, 14 small oil industry vessels, some dud oil rights in the Middle East and the Ritz in Paris, which is in fact their only luxury hotel and which between 1983 and 1985 had been a loss-maker on its ordinary transactions.

Even where Fayed enterprises have shown profits these have amounted to nothing remotely like the hundreds of millions involved in acquiring the House of Fraser. In other words, the whole operation was made possible by funds put up, presumably for his own profit, by some undeclared beneficiary operating from behind the scenes. The Sultan of Brunei is suggested as a possibility. It is not known how far this arrangement might have had the effect in any way of involving the House of Fraser in any costs undisclosed at the time of takeover.

The DTI report which eventually blew the gaff was drawn up reluctantly under pressure from Lonrho, aggrieved by its defeat in the takeover contest, and some of whose directors are Tory MPs. Two Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, Norman Tebbit and Leon Brittan, refused to investigate the Fayeds at all. Paul Channon finally ordered an enquiry. Lord Young suppressed its findings. Only now has Nicholas Ridley agreed to publish.

WORSHIP OF MONEY

This caginess is easy to explain. Like their boss Mrs. Thatcher and their fellow Tories in general, these gentlemen are all committed to the idea that money — and the bigger the better — is the universal passport, and that it doesn't matter tuppence about the origins of those who happen to have it or, as in this case, seem to have it.

So long as he has megabucks at his disposal, anyone, from anywhere in the world, can regard Britain and her assets as up for grabs. The Fayed scandal is nothing if not an indictment of this international financial free-for-all in which our rulers believe heart and soul.

Even now, Ridley is refusing to take any action against the Fayeds. They are not even to be banned from continuing to hold UK directorships or from hanging on to Harrods.

As for prosecution, British police officers and serious fraud investigators seem to have found Egypt's authorities very unco-operative in supplying the kind of evidence necessary for a conviction. This is hardly suprising. Any Egyptians in the know about their brethren's Harrods triumph probably look upon this spectacle of Britain's nose being rubbed in the dirt as the best joke since Suez.

Meanwhile, if Britain does not wish herself to end up being seen as the global patsy of all time, at the mercy of every glib alien con-man who pitches up on her shores with a wad of grubby banknotes in his pocket, it is for her to start taking steps to protect national assets built up by the brains and sweat of generations of her own people. As things stand, she is wide open to mugging by the rest of the world.

CONNED THE ESTABLISHMENT

New evidence of Ulster sell-out plan

WHILE the Government still continues to protest that Northern Ireland will remain in the United Kingdom for as long as the majority wishes, fresh evidence has come to light that it intends the very reverse.

In a report in the Daily Mail last month it was stated that Ulster Secretary Peter Brooke, when making his now notorious statement that the IRA could not be defeated by military means and that it was not inconceivable that the Government might one day be talking to that gang, was not committing the gaffe he was imagined to be committing. In fact his words were very calculated.

The report went on to say of Brooke that: "He now talks with increasing frequency about the possibility of the end of direct rule and a devolved Northern Ireland Government."

BROOKE
Not such a fool as he sounds

The report then gave a chilling hint of the direction in which Government thinking is proceeding when it said: "THE ULTIMATE OBJECTIVE, IT IS BELIEVED, IS A FEDERAL UNION OF TWO IRELANDS, A COMPROMISE WHICH SHOULD EVEN SATISFY CHARLES HAUGHEY AND HIS FIANNA FAIL FOLLOWERS."

The final insult

DUBLIN COURT'S RELEASE OF I.R.A. DUO RENDERS ANGLO-IRISH AGREEMENT A TOTAL FARCE

IN AN INSULTING JUDGEMENT against Britain, the judges of the Irish Republic's Supreme Court last month refused to return two escaped IRA terrorist convicts to Ulster. The two gangsters, Dermont Finucane and James Pius-Clarke, who was originally jailed for murdering a soldier of the Ulster Defence Regiment, took part in a mass break-out from Northern Ireland's Maze Prison seven years ago and sought refuge in Eire, where they have been ever since.

At the extradition hearing in Dublin, Chief Justice Thomas Finlay acknowledged that during the escape by 38 IRA thugs one prison officer was stabbed and died of a heart attack, four others were also stabbed, two were shot and 13 others kicked and beaten.

But instead of treating these additional crimes as yet another reason why Finucane and Pius-Clarke should be extradited to get their deserts, Eire's Chief Justice used them as a justification for setting the two terrorists free in the Republic, where it is thought they will continue to enjoy asylum. His reasoning?

What he called the 'constitutional rights' of these gangsters had to be given priority over the punishment for the acts of terrorism for which they had been jailed in Ulster. In his words, if they were sent back there would be "a risk that they would be assaulted or injured by the illegal actions of prison staff at the Maze."

This decision was described by one of the judges as setting the yardstick for all future extradition cases. But it is in fact only the latest case, albeit the worst so far, in a series of refusals by the Irish Republic to extradite IRA thugs to Britain.

Yet in spite of this slap in Britain's face, Mrs. Thatcher and her ministers do not appear to have any intention of ending the infamous and treasonable Anglo-Irish Agreement.

AID AND COMFORT TO GANGSTERS

Arrived at back in 1985 between Mrs. Thatcher and Eire Premier Charles Haughey, the Anglo-Irish Agreement made big concessions to Britain's republican enemies. By allowing the Republic a say in the running of Ulster's affairs it called into question both the province's British status and the resolution of Mrs. Thatcher and her Government to uphold that status. In this respect it unquestionably lent aid and comfort to republican terrorists and their supporters, both inside Ulster and beyond.

Faced with such a monumental act of appeasement, proving the mood of defeatism and war-weariness of Britain's present rulers, the IRA has not been slow to conclude that if it keeps up the terrorist pressure it can achieve its ultimate object: the full separation of Ulster from Britain and its incorporation into a united Marxist Irish Republic. Indeed, the years since Thatcher and Haughey put their signatures to the document have seen some of the worst ever republican atrocities against both loyal Ulster folk and other Britons. These have included such outrages as the bombing at Enniskillen on Remembrance Day 1987 and the butchery in Belfast of the two army corporals by a republican mob before the TV cameras back in 1988.

PRETEXT FOR AGREEMENT

Incredibly, the Anglo-Irish Agreement was originally touted to the public in both Ulster and mainland Britain as a means of improving cross-border co-operation in the fight against IRA terrorism! This latest refusal of the Republic to extradite the two terrorists makes a total nonsense of such a pretext.

In the words of Ivor Stanbrook MP, Vice-Chairman of the Tory Party's own backbench committee on Northern Ireland: "The anti-extradition campaign in Ireland has finally triumphed and the British Government must now reconsider the whole basis of the Anglo-Irish Agreement." In other words, under the Agreement Britain has been giving her republican enemies something for nothing. The Irish Republic has been given a right to interfere in this part of Britain's territory which it covets, without in the end having to give anything at all in return.

FUTILE WAILINGS

It is of little avail for Ulster Secretary Peter Brooke and his officials to wail, as they are now doing, that Eire's judges, being independent of its Government, lie outside the scope of the Agreement — which was strictly between the British and Irish Governments — and are therefore free to arrive at whatever judgements they see fit in extradition cases. This being so, it is hard to see how the Agreement ever really could have had the kind of teeth in security matters that Mrs. Thatcher claimed for it. At the end of the day, it has simply left the republican terrorists with their bolt-hole in Eire pretty much intact, and many of them still at large able to plan and execute yet more atrocities against British people in Ulster and on the mainland.

Meanwhile it remains extremely unlikely that either Mrs. Thatcher, or any

ONLY ONE SOLUTION!

Report by JAMES MORRIS

The lethal tensions of multi-racial Britain and how to end them

NOW IT'S OFFICIAL. Even the Home Office can't ignore it. Just below the surface, and behind all the efforts of Britain's political masters to hide the fact, the multi-racial society is becoming exactly the nightmare of bedlam and tension that has been predicted by ourselves from day one — and indeed by all of those in this country with half an ounce of sense and knowledge and the courage to speak out.

As reported in the Daily Telegraph recently, the Home Office has just allowed one of its officials, Mr. Tony Marshall, to be seconded to a new 'conciliation' service, going under the gobbledegook title of the 'Forum for Initiatives in Reparation and Mediation'. This is supposed to help resolve disputes between neighbours on housing estates and elsewhere, which are said to be getting more violent up and down Britain, by sending professional 'peacemakers' along to mediate between the parties to them, as and where they arise.

There is only one type of neighbourhood, above all others, where the 'conciliation' brigade has thought it necessary to set up shop. In the words of the Telegraph, this is to be found in "areas with heavily concentrated and racially mixed populations."

One of the major causes of violent clashes has been the noise from Afro-Caribbean all-night parties. In fact, this has already led to a number of deaths.

A while back, Willian McFall of Birmingham, a white man, was kept awake by midnight jungle noise to the point where he finally felt driven to solve the problem by discharging a shotgun through the window of the neighbouring flat from which the din was coming. One of the guests was killed.

More recently a middle-aged couple, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson of Stockwell, S.W. London, were burnt to death at the instigation of a West Indian neighbour, who put of his friends up to firebombing their flat. The reason? The Johnsons had complained about the reggae rumpus he was in the habit of pushing out at full volume in the small hours of the morning.

'CULTURAL DIFFERENCES'

This is the kind of thing one 'conciliation officer', from the nightmare East London inner-city borough of Newham, seems to have been talking about when he spoke of 'cultural differences' lying at the root of the clashes in which he found himself intervening. In more than half of Newham's cases last year the complainant, he says, was a white European. In half of these "the object of the anger was a member of an ethnic minority, usually black." He admits that such complaints cannot just be pigeonholed, in the way race-mixing politicians and their sidekicks would no doubt like, as cases of so-called 'racial prejudice'. They reflect real problems and conflicts.

On top of this, the ghetto environment which has been allowed to grow up in British cities has spawned black-on-black violence as well. One example of this was the stabbing by sleepless Cleveland Monerville of Catford, S.E. London, of his reggae-loving neighbour in a doorstep scuffle at one o'clock in the morning.

Of course, causes other than the enforced race-mixing rammed down the throats of the British people in recent times are used to explain these unneighbourly ructions. One of these is 'territorial' squabbles brought on by battery-hen living conditions in high-rise blocks and tightly packed terraces.

But it can be said that, before the politicians started turning Britain's terraced streets into testing grounds for close cohabitation between Whites, Blacks, Browns and Yellows, the residents of those streets seldom seem to have felt quite the same urge to shoot, knife or burn out their neighbours in 'territorial' squabbles. This was in spite of the fact that the purely British inhabitants of such neighbourhoods, as in the 1930s, often had much lower standards of living than their multi-racial deizens of today.

TWO OF THE 'CONCILIATORS'

Pictured here are Messrs. Vishnu Wormani and John Crawley. The latter is a 'Co-ordninator' of Newham Borough's project on neighbour's disputes. Much public money will be spent on keeping this project going, but it is likely to have not the slightest real effect in reducing the conflicts inevitable in a multi-racial society like the one the politicians have forced on Britain.

It is also open to question whether the inhuman tower blocks of our big cities would be quite the same powder-kegs of potential conflict they so often are at present without the aggravating factor of race.

SHIRKING THE PROPER SOLUTION

Although Britain's political masters seem now to have come close to admitting this by concentrating their new 'conciliation' effort on the multi-racial inner cities, they are far from acceptting the commonsense solution. The vision of the future held by the Home Office Chief 'Conciliator' Mr. Marshall is, in the words of the Daily Telegraph, of an "overcrowded, multi-racial, increasingly aggressive Britain." But, no doubt echoing his master's wisdom, all he can think of by way of an answer is to make more use of official 'peacemakers'.

To say the least, any such half-baked makeshift scheme as this is little better than a con when set against the seriousness of multi-racial Britain's growing tensions, so many of which now seem to be turning really lethal. These tensions, after all, are something of which Britain's rulers are fully well aware.

They are for ever claiming to want 'racial harmony' in this country. So far this has mostly meant that native-born Britons are endlessly expected to turn the other cheek in the face of the overwhelmingly unwanted multi-racial transformation of their homeland. In their efforts to enforce this, the politicians have put laws on the statute book designed to compel Britons to accept immigrants into their places of work, pubs, clubs and neighbourhoods. On top of this, they have introduced yet more laws to end the freedom of Britons even to protest at what is being done to them.

At the same time, they have allowed rioters and criminals, if they happened to be black and concentrated in sufficient numbers in our cities, to get away with riot and mayhem, and even rewarded them with special types of kid-glove policing and anti-white 'reverse-discrimination'. To cap it all, militant Moslem immigrants have been allowed to incite murder on our streets, a serious crime under our laws, without a finger being lifted to prosecute them.

The end result of all this was summed up by the Daily Telegraph: "The break-up of traditional communities has left inner-city areas emotionally vulnerable, the elderly feeling isolated, the young rootless, immigrants disorientated." There would seem to be little enough trace of any 'harmony' here.

It now seems obvious that if British people in fact want real harmony in their country they have only one course, the course that none of their ruling politicians will even countenance — the commonsense course that only nationalism stand for. They will quite simply have to re-establish the traditional community referred to in the Telegraph report.

Before all else, this will mean the ending of the multi-racial society once and for all.

Is this not racial incitement?

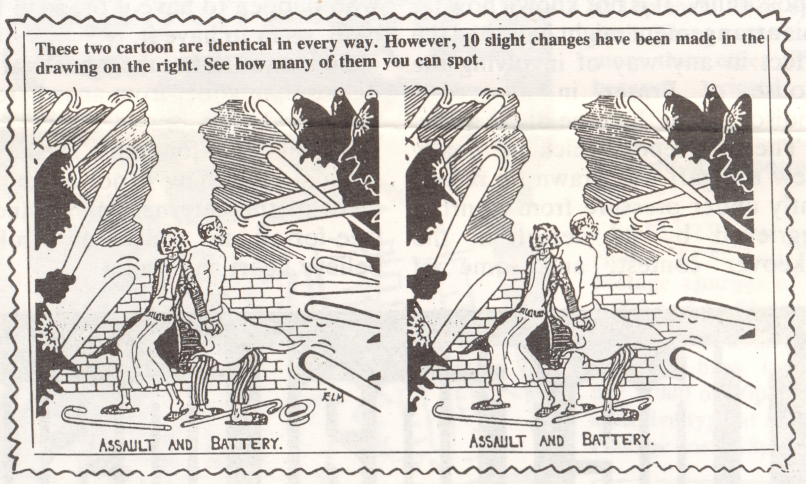
THIS is a cartoon which recently appeared, believe it or not, on the children's page of the Caribbean Times, an 'ethnic minority' newspaper for black immigrants in Britain. Young West Indians are invited to spot the differences in detail between two pictures, portraying an elderly black couple surrounded by silhouettes (with obviously European features) of brutal truncheon-wielding British policemen. Both pictures are captioned 'Assault and Battery'.

The Editors of British Nationalist and Spearhead were both sent to prison in 1986, under the so-called 'Public Order Act', for publishing facts and opinions about the mayhem of multi-racial Britain, part of the evidence used to convict them being illustrations of black people which depicted them in less than flattering poses. This was deemed to be 'racially offensive' and to amount to 'incitement', despite the inability of the prosecution to point to one single instance of 'hatred' or 'disorder' having arisen from what had been printed.

Meanwhile, riots, primarily directed against our police in multi-racial districts of mainly Afro-Caribbean population in Britain's big cities have become a fact of life in the last decade. Given such a background, ideas such as this one, fed to young Blacks at a tender age, could end up having an effect that is nothing less than explosive. All the ingredients are there, 'hatred', 'incitement' — you name it! And it's 'racial' too!

But what's the betting that, since this is material published in an 'ethnic minority' paper for the consumption of 'ethnic minority' members, with any 'race hatred' or 'incitement' that might arise aimed solely against Whites, those responsible will not be prosecuted?

Over to you, DPP!



These two cartoon are identical in every way. However, 10 slight changes have been made in the drawing on the right. See how many of them you can spot.
ASSAULT AND BATTERY.
ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

THE CARTOON

If the racial roles in this drawing were reversed, and the truncheon-wielding 'nasties' shown as black and their would-be victims white, the publishers would almost certainly be prosecuted for stirring up 'racial hatred'. But as it is the other way round they are allowed to get away with it

Govt. admits pro-immigrant bias in local authority grants

AT THE END of February, a spokesman for the Government acknowledged that a special bias exists in the assessment of the sums to be allocated for grants for local authorities, this bias being in favour of those areas where the largest concentrations of 'ethnic minority' residents are believed to exist.

The acknowledgement came in a letter from junior Environment Minister Christopher Chope, written in reply to a query by the Tory MP for Langbaurgh, Mr. Richard Holt. Holt had been troubled by the discovery of differing allocations made within his constituency, which had seemed to favour immigrant areas. He wrote to the Ministry and obtained an admission from Mr. Chope that the presence of 'ethnic minorities' in an area was a factor, though not the only one, in these assessments.

The assumption in the Government's thinking was that such areas were likely to be poorer and therefore more in need, but Mr. Holt replied that this was nonsense. Many of the 'New Commonwealth' residents in his constituency, he said, were "very wealthy."

Quite predictably, the Government's discrimination against native British Whites won the approval of Labour MPs. Robin Corbett, front-bench spokesman for community affairs, said: "I welcome the fact that it is done." Another Labourite, David Blunkett, described it as "perfectly rational."

MANDELA WHITEWASHED — BOO-HOO!

IT SEEMS that the 'anti-apartheid' brigade have been getting their knickers in a twist. A statue of recently released black South African communist terrorist Nelson Mandela on London's South Bank, just beside the Festival Hall, has apparently been in the wars.

A few days after the freeing of the red gangster by the South African Government, this bronze monstrosity was doused in white paint. On a nearby wall was written a slogan supporting the cause of civilised rule in South Africa. This claimed 'Afrikaner Power'.

Next to it, in what could straightaway be seen as an obvious reference to Mandela himself, was printed the word 'scum'.

Spokescreatures for the 'anti-apartheid' movement found the attack 'deplorable'. Alan Brooks, described as 'Executive Secretary' of this lunatic-left body, complained at what he called "a few people" reacting to Mandela's release in such a "petty and spiteful way." A colleague, Andre Schott, claimed: "It is mindless racism to do this sort of thing."

But when it comes to the question of whose whitewash of Mandela is the more objectionable — that of the persons unknown who tipped the paint over his South Bank statue or that of the 'anti-apartheid' freaks who have tried to turn this convicted terrorist into a saintly folk-hero — there may be two views.

The facts of Mandela's case, now mainly shunted to one side, are indeed well known. In what was internationally admitted to have been a fair trial, Mandela was convicted of treason and imprisoned some 27 years ago by a South African court. He had, by his own admission, plotted to unleash a communist-inspired armed uprising in the country. Had this come off, instead of being thwarted by vigilant South African police, as in fact happened, in all probability millions would have died in the ensuing bloodbath.

The South African authorities would have been quite within their rights to send Mandela to the gallows for the offence of which he was found guilty. Instead, they showed great leniency, merely imposing a gaol sentence.

Earlier, in 1952, Mandela had been involved in stirring up a 'disobedience campaign' among some sections of South Africa's black population, mainly his own tribal supporters. In one incident in a native township arising from this campaign, a white nun, Sister Mary Quinlan, who had been tending sick Africans, was hacked to death by a mob incited by the propaganda of Mandela and his comrades. Sister Quinlan's killers then feasted on her remains.

When in the 1980s ANC mobsters launched their infamous rubber-tyre 'necklace' killings, mainly against fellow Africans who refused to join them, Mandela could have stopped this horrific

WHAT A MESS!

A workman tries to remove the white paint splashed over the statue of 'Saint Nelson' on London's South Bank. This piece of artwork was apparently performed at night time by persons unknown.

WAKE UP, WHITE MAN, YOU'RE BEING SWAMPED!

IN AN ALARMING PREDICTION, the European Commission forecasts that by early next century Europe, including Britain, will have more people over 50 than under that age.

Meanwhile, very different processes are at work among the coloured millions looking to Europe as their future living space.

The number of coloureds flooding in from the Third World, whether legally or illegally, whether as so-called 'refugees' or merely as seekers after the good life they think is to be had here, is certainly not going down.

As is well known, our own Government is now planning an influx of any number of Chinese from Hong Kong in the near future.

Nor are immigrant birthrates on the decline. Afro-Asians already in Britain and other European lands are reproducing much faster than their host populations, and are therefore by and large much more youthful in composition.

The brutal logic of the situation is that the Europeans are being replaced on their own soil. If this situation is not turned round, and soon, Whites stand to be swamped by a coloured tide.

It is time for Whites to call a halt to immigration and set about the work of repatriation of all persons of non-European descent. It is time also for healthy relations between the sexes to be restored, and wholesome family values once again to be the norm, so that white children may once again be born and raised in such a way as to guarantee the survival of our kind.

Wake up, white folk! If you don't take action while you still can, there are many among you who might yet live just long enough to hear the curses against you of such children and grandchildren as you might have managed to bring into the world. For if you refuse to act, you will have destroyed their future.

Just what kind of sub-humans are they letting into our country?

SANE NATIONS, if they are in need of immigrants at all, seek individuals from abroad who fit their needs in a number of ways. For a start, such immigrants should match the population of their adopted country in behaviour and outlook. In the second place, they should have something of value to offer their new homeland. Thirdly, they should be capable of becoming loyal citizens.

Britain's rulers have paid scant regard to any of these requirements over the past 40 years, in which they have been encouraging almost unlimited mass immigration, mainly from the Third World. It is highly questionable whether our overcrowded islands ever needed large numbers of immigrants at all, let alone from such a source. It is unquestionable that such an immigration policy has led to the arrival on our shores of a number of individuals we could well do without.

One such was Philippino Victor Castigador, jailed for life at the Old Bailey last month for the 'human torch' murders of two security guards at a Soho amusement arcade. In company with two West Indians, Paul Clinton and Calvin Nelson, and their white-slut girl-friends, Alison Woodside and Karen Dunn, he led a revenge robbery raid on the arcade, where, as an employee, he claimed to have been denied promotion.

CASTIGADOR
Set fire to former working colleagues

The gang herded two of the arcade's Tamil guards and two others, all of whom Castigador knew personally, at gunpoint into a basement vault. Giggling, Castigador then poured white spirit over them and set them alight, ignoring the screams of his burning victims as he and his accomplices made their escape with £9,000 in loot.

Passing sentence, Mr. Justice Rougier told Castigador: "I find it impossible to understand the workings of a mind as twisted and evil as yours."

MURKY PAST

Earlier, while in custody, Castigador had coolly bragged to Scotland Yard detectives of having been a hit-man in one of former Philippines President Marcos' death-squads. Under questioning by the officers, he had counted off on his fingers the dozen 'enemies of the state' he had butchered in various unpleasant ways, before dispatching their trussed-up corpses into a river.

Castigador had been admitted to Britain in 1985 after marrying an Englishwoman, but the marriage ended when he started beating her and their two offspring.

Did our immigration authorities not know of Castigador's history when they admitted him into this country? If not, they were incompetent. If they did, letting him in was criminal.

HELPED IN VICIOUS MURDER

PSYCHOPATH

In a second case, Barbados-born psychopath David Lashley was jailed for life last month for the rape and murder of Australian heiress Janie Shepherd 13 years ago. Lashley, whose hatred of white women drove him to atrocious sex-attacks, had boasted to cell-mates of having killed Janie, this boast being made whilst he was serving a prison term for rapes on other blonde white women he had deliberately singled out as his victims. As a result of one series of such attacks he had earned himself the nickname of the 'Beast of Shepherd's Bush' (this deriving from the name of the London district where the attacks had taken place).

Lashley had picked on Janie during a brief 10-month spell of freedom following the completion of six years of the 12-year sentence he had received for this spate of rapes. This was the only period he had had out of jail in 20 years. Janie's body was found stripped and bound. After raping her, Lashley had strangled her so violently that her neck-bones had been snapped.

He told one cell-mate that he had carried out this vicious murder to stop his victim from ever identifying him to police.

Mr. Justice Aliott, presiding in the case, is said to have privately recommended to the Home Office that Lashley is too dangerous ever to be set at large again, and that he should remain in jail for the rest of his life. Of the killer's motives, Det. Constable Farrenden said: "Lashley sees the world in terms of Blacks against Whites, and he is very prejudiced."

LASHLEY
Hating white women, he picked on blondes for his horrific sex-attacks

Many will feel that modern Britain already has more than its fair share of home-grown criminal degenerates and psychopaths, without importing elements like these from elsewhere to add to the burden. This on its own might seem sufficient grounds, just to begin with, for a thoroughgoing revision of the nation's policies with regard to immigration, and indeed with regard to the whole question of the future composition of our population.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I have received recent issues of British Nationalist from a friend in your country. I am very interested in what is going on in Britain because I am a university student of English philology and I think that only nationalists can give a true and objective picture of their country to other peoples. I am also interested in your paper because I am myself a nationalist and can understand the problems of patriots in other countries.

I was glad to read that there are people in Britain who understand what is really taking place now in Eastern Europe. What is happening here is a sham revolution. We have just exchanged one evil for another. In the case of Poland we have changed from Communism to Zionism. The whole new Government is controlled by Zionists, the Prime Minister being a Jew who has been 'converted' to the Christian faith. Our TV, radio and press are full of pro-Israeli and pro-Zionist propaganda. Solidarity is also largely controlled by Jews. All who try to oppose them are persecuted.

Many people here are blind: they think that if the Communists have been defeated there is no other danger for our country. Zionists here are now selling Poland to aliens, mostly fellow-Jews, and they are busy changing the laws to suit themselves.

Nevertheless, there are patriots here who will not give up the fight for their nationhood and real freedom.

Best wishes to all British patriots!

P.S. I have written this letter in my own name and with my own address, but if you decide to publish it please do not print my name or address — we have our 'race-relations' secret police here too!

NAME & ADDRESS SUPPLIED
Poland

Sir, — We in the Dundee BNP are often asked why the British National Party has formed a unit in our city.

Our reply is that over the last few years we have seen the trouble caused by the presence of immigrants in England and have resolved that "it must not happen here."

Now in Dundee alone we have 2,200 Pakistanis, 1,800 Indians, 400 Bangladeshis, 1,400 Chinese and a few hundred Afro-Caribbeans. These figures shock the people of our city, who up till recently have been burying their heads in the sand and pretending that the problem did not exist.

We have seen an increase in crime and unemployment in Dundee and now see people in increasing numbers turning to the BNP for assistance and guidance to help them combat the multi-racial policy of the ruling political establishment.

In the first few months of 1990 there have been many enquiries received by the new BNP unit here. People are at last standing up for themselves and joining in the battle to save their country. The future of the BNP in Dundee and Tayside looks very good.

We have met with a great deal of opposition from the local 'Community Relations' Council (yes, we have the same garbage here!). And the leader of the Labour-controlled City Council recently said: "We will make sure the BNP organise nothing in Dundee." How dare these tin-pot dictators tell us what we can or can't do in our city! Well, the BNP will in Dundee for a big rally next month — so the local left-wingers had better get used to having us around!

REDS FOILED AT NOTTINGHAM

THE NOTTINGHAM RALLY held by the British National Party on the 31st March was what might be called a qualified success.

The local 'powers-that-be', as at Bradford last September, did their very best to make it quite impossible for the BNP to hold a public meeting in the proper sense of the term. In accordance with the usual custom of today's 'democracy', the party was refused the hire of any premises owned by the local authority. It was thus forced to opt for the outdoors. The local council thereupon made a ruling that the party may not use any open space within the city, and the BNP was forced to hold the rally in a carpark outside the city limits.

From the start, local left-wingers, centred mainly on the university, contrived to ensure that no rally would take place at all. In this quest, the left was foiled. A red mob of about 150 eventually turned up at the scene of the rally, where around 100 BNP supporters had assembled (there would have been considerably more had everyone making for the rally been able to get there). At this stage a very small police presence existed and could not have stopped a determined attack by the reds. The latter, however, funked the issue and satisfied themselves with a torrent of verbal abuse. After the completion of the event, the BNP party was obliged by the police to make its exit across a field — instead of directly past the reds, as we would have preferred.

Part of the BNP party then proceeded to nearby Mansfield, where a highly successful indoor meeting took place.

Although the earlier rally did not take place entirely according to plan, the event made big publicity in the Nottingham Evening Post and on local radio.

East Midlands Organiser John Peacock has asked us to affirm to any persons who turned up at the original rendezvous point in Nottingham that a BNP contingent was there to redirect any who wished to get to the rally.

Hong Kong Chinese:
NO ROOM HERE!
Mrs. Thatcher won a general election in 1979 after pledging that there would be no further large-scale immigration into Britain.
In the years following, that pledge has been broken again and again, with new waves of immigrants continuing to pour in.
Now Mrs. Thatcher's Government wants us to accept yet another immigrant influx. The Government is preparing to grant right of abode here to a number of Hong Kong Chinese at present estimated at a quarter of a million — as an assurance to those people of a refuge to run to if they do not like life in Hong Kong after the Communist Chinese take-over in 1997.
But this is not all. Altogether there are 5-6 million Chinese in Hong Kong who may well want to get out when the colony becomes part of China proper. If our Government accepts now that we have an obligation to take some of them, what is to stop it later extending that obligation to cover the lot?
We maintain that Britain should take none of these people — not one single one of them!
We say it's time that we had a British Government that recognised an obligation to the British people alone — people who are living in an already overcrowded country, short of housing, short of jobs, short of schools, short of open spaces, with social services strained to the limit and with more than its share of ethnic conflict.
So we say No to the Hong Kong Chinese. We also say No to any more unassimilable immigrants. Finally, we say Yes to a massive programme of repatriation whereby our ethnic minorities would be resettled in their ancestral homelands.
Britain is our country — it's time we took it back!

DAY OF ACTION IN DUNDEE

ACTIVISTS of the Scottish Region of the British National Party held a highly successful 'Day of Action' in Dundee on March 31st, mainly for the purpose of advertising and promoting the party's first major rally in the city, to take place on May 12th.

Pictured on the left here is a paper-sales team, headed by local Organiser Gareth Norman (in centre, bareheaded). The team reported an excellent response from local people. Altogther about 25 took part in the activities, which also included the handing out of leaflets advertising the May rally. Dundee BNP thanks Edinburgh members who came over and helped out.

Anyone interested in attending the rally should keep in touch with us to obtain further details (location, etc.) nearer the date.

likely successor of any political stripe at Westminster, will change the weak-kneed policies of the last 20 years, under which republican mayhem has been allowed to grow to its present scale.

Only under an altogether new order of things in Britain as a whole will Ulster's position as part of the United Kingdom be properly guaranteed, outside interference be firmly kept out, and republican terrorists be given the death penalty so as to ensure that, come what may, they can never kill again.

MANDELA WHITEWASHED

activity by a single word from his prison cell. This he never gave.

That even now little has changed in Mandela's thinking was shown on his release. Giving his approval to continued 'armed struggle', he told a crowd of his supporters that they should not worry overmuch about killing Whites.

It is now rumoured that this terrorist thug might visit Britain at Easter. It is not known whether Margaret Thatcher, who up to now has refused to visit South Africa until the authorities there freed him to resume his ANC career, intends to receive him personally.

A previous statue, occupying the same spot as the present Mandela one on the South Bank, was attacked in 1986, at the beginning of the week in which the Prime Minister and her Tory Government extended their official recognition to the Marxist ANC. Eventually that statue was destroyed by fire.

We wept no tears when this happened. Likewise we weep no tears at the more recent paint treatment given to the successor statue. The boo-hoos that greeted this efficient piece of midnight artwork we leave to the drooling racial masochists of the 'anti-apartheid' movement and its nauseating fellow-travellers.

B.N.P. DEFENDS WHITES

'racial attacks' expected to be committed by Whites upon their people. Was it a coincidence that on that same day a 45-year-old white man was stabbed by a ten-strong armed gang of Asians in an unprovoked attack near his house in Spitalfields?

The BNP will be fighting the Spitalfields ward to give hope to the white community there which has to bear the brunt of attacks of this kind. We have not forgotten these people, and we will never abandon them. Because of the dangers involved in engaged in normal political activity, such as leafletting, in this area due to the presence of these marauding 'vigilante' groups, the BNP campaign in Spitalfields will centre on a major public election meeting, the details of which are given elsewhere on this page. The theme of this meeting will be 'Rights for Whites'. All activists and supporters from all over the country are urged to attend the meeting, which will be one of the most important events in the BNP calendar this year. This is a reproduction of the front page of the* Evening Times*, a daily paper published in Glasgow which has a readership of hundreds of thousands all over Scotland. The headline and story were printed on March 13th and reports BNP leafletting of schools in the Glasgow area. The two BNP activists pictured are Steve Cartwright (on left) and Ian MacMillan (on right). This is just one of many pieces of big publicity that the BNP has won in Scotland in recent weeks.

GLASGOW this year has won the title of European City of Culture. It might also appropriately be called the European City of Racial Nationalism, for the city has become the focal point of a great deal of mass media attention given in recent weeks to the activities of the British National Party north of the border.

BNP growth in Scotland over the past year or so has thrown its opponents into a real panic. "It couldn't happen here" was for a long time the cry of left-wingers, liberals and other kinds of race renegades in Scotland as they watched the racial conflicts breaking out in the cities of England, followed as these have been by widespread anger on the part of the indigenous inhabitants. The Scots, it was thought, would be quite happy to integrate with non-white immigrants and their descendants, even if it meant losing their ethnic identity. But not so!

Even though the dimensions the race problem has attained in Scotland are still small compared with further south, white resistance is strong and growing. In addition, there are many other issues which have generated interest in the BNP in Scotland, such as the Ulster conflict (a lot of Scots identify strongly with the loyalist community in Northern Ireland, which is largely of Scottish descent, unemployment and the breakdown of law and order.

The Tories in Scotland have become a pathetic farce, leaving the BNP as the only force offering firm resistance to the left, the Liberals and the separatist SNP — whose leaders speak loudly of establishing a 'Scottish identity' but are quite happy to see Scotland become multi-racial.

The culmination in the campaign to make the voice of the BNP heard in Scotland was last month's Scottish Eye programme, broadcast on Channel Four TV and shown all over the United Kingdom. This programme represented a terrific success for the BNP — so much so that it alarmed the party's opponents in the mass media, leading to more publicity the following week when on Right to Reply (Channel Four, Saturday, 6 p.m.), when one of Britain's most active race-mixers, Andrew Johnson, complained bitterly about the BNP being given a platform for its views.

The programme, which lasted for nearly half an hour, was given up mostly to the BNP in Scotland. As well as an interview with John Tyndall, it also featured questions answered by Glasgow Organiser Eric Brand and other Scottish members, Isobel Hernon, Steve Cartwright, Ian MacMillan and Harry Mullin. All the party's Scottish representatives, though not highly experienced in TV interviews, handled themselves excellently. So aghast was the media establishment at the favourable way in which the BNP came out of the programme that the repeat, planned for Scotland only on the following Monday evening, was cancelled.

The very fact that the decision was made to produce this programme on the BNP in the first place is something for which the credit must go to the party's activists north of the border, whose hard work and dedication have made the BNP one of the biggest talking points in Scotland at the present time.

THE VIDEO Uplifting story of white resistance in US

NEVER BEFORE has this paper included a review of any video available on the normal commercial market, but Betrayed, by Warner and rated 18 must be an exception. Clearly modelled on the story of the Order in the USA, the scene is reset from the mountains and forests of Washington State in the North West to the prairies of the American Mid-West.

The opening is both exciting and dramatic when a race-mixing Jewish disc-jockey (in real life Alan Bird) is executed — gunned down in a hail of bullets.

Working undercover, a female FBI agent investigates a peaceful and wholesome farming community and falls in love with a clean-cut young widower. But all is not as it seems, and the betrayal is on. Although complete with the compulsory bad ending (for the hero at least), the last mission is a success, and the film ends on a really uplifting note.

Starring Tom Berenger and Debra Winger, Betrayed is a propaganda backfire. There will be many who will identify with the Order and Order activists , who supply plenty of good role models.

An inspiring film, Betrayed is required viewing for anyone wanting an antidote to the multi-racial garbage on ITV and BBC. It can be obtained in most video shops.

CHELSEA SALES FORCE

OVER the past couple of months the British National Party has turned Chelsea Football Club into a BNP stronghold.

Starting in February, sales teams have toured the pubs around Stamford Bridge selling copies of British Nationalist. For the big derby game with Tottenham Hotspur dozens of papers were sold to both home and visiting fans.

The very warm response proves that Chelsea fans are still among the most patriotic in the country — 150 papers were sold in just 70 minutes. Everyone seemed to be asking for packs of the BNP's much sought-after stickers, but most had to be disappointed after the sales team quickly sold out.

Chelsea's next home game was another big draw, this time with Manchester United being the visitors. As before, the BNP sales team chose several well-sited ale houses and swept through, pausing briefly for the odd drink and chatting to friends (there are a lot of BNP Chelsea fans!). This time 100 papers were sold along with 2,000 stickers.

Since then, paper sales have taken place at every home game, and the BNP regularly disposes of over 100 copies and around 2,000-3,000 stickers at every match.

Chelsea Football Club has a well-known nationalist following, and the fans are clearly delighted to see that the BNP has once again made London a stronghold for nationalism.

BNP Regional Focus

This issue of British Nationalist is so full of good news about BNP activities that this month's Regional Focus has had to be held over till next month to make room for the many reports coming in. Sorry folks!

MARCH THROUGH EAST END WINS BIG SUPPORT

BNP defends Whites

VERY LITTLE happens in the East London borough of Tower Hamlets without the British National Party hearing about it through its extensive network of supporters in the neighbourhood. In February we learned that a march would take place on the 24th of the month in protest against the stabbing of a white schoolboy, John Stoner, in a classroom in Morpeth School, Bethnal Green, by a mob of Asians. The BNP immediately swung into action. A leaflet was produced and distributed which drew attention to this dreadful attack. The attack was in fact unprecedented, not because it was the first of its kind — which it most certainly was not, but because both the police and the local press actually admitted it was a racial one, carried out by Asians on an innocent white victim.

Report from EDDY BUTLER

Our leaflet gained enormous attention. Not only was Tower Hamlets branch of the BNP flooded with enquiries from local residents but also the local and national media focused on the racial troubles engulfing East London. The family of John Stoner was besieged by reporters, who just wanted to know whether the BNP was involved in the campaign.

Due to the media fears that the BNP was directing a popular uprising among the white community in East London, the case of John Stoner received massive publicity, being reported in the Sunday Correspondent, the Guardian and the Independent. Our leaflet was featured on a current affairs programme on London Weekend Television, and the East London Advertiser devoted its entire front page to an attempt to smear the BNP and create a wedge between the party and the local white community. In this aim it failed miserably.

Pressure was put on the march organisers to denounce the BNP, both by the police and by local 'community' groups. The police warned that if a BNP presence was detected the march would be banned at a moment's notice. The local council, together with local MPs, clergy and schoolteachers all agitated for a ban, the excuse being the BNP involvement. This was quite an eye-opener for many apolitical locals, who now saw these 'community' leaders in their true colours.

As a result of this pressure, the march organisers asked the BNP to keep a low profile on the day of the march — a request to which we readily agreed. The march itself was a great success, with some 300 East Enders taking part, including about 50 local BNP members. In the week following, the BNP again gained excellent local news coverage. Round One of our East London campaign ended in a great victory.

However, of the 20 Asians who attacked John Stoner only eight were arrested, and our information is that only four of these will be charged. We await their trial with interest.

MORE ATTCKS

On that same day, February 24th, another Asian gang was at work. This time, a local father, Terry Swinney (38) was set upon, viciously stabbed and left for dead by a mob who ambushed his car. Only three Asians were arrested for this horrific attack. Showing a contemptuous degree of nerve, a 'Stepney Three Campaign' was launched by 'Workers Against Racism' to get freed those arrested for this attack.

In the days following this attack, feelings in East London ran very high. To cap things further, a 12-year-old white schoolboy was also attacked by a 20-strong Asian mob in Stepney. In response to requests from many East Enders, the British National Party decided to help launch the 'Rights for Whites' campaign, the purpose of which was to give the white community a real voice — after all the other supposed 'community' leaders had blatantly sided with the Asians. In order to channel the anger of the white community in a constructive direction, it was decided that a second march should take place. This march, however, would have a much more overt political flavour than the previous one, with the BNP not, as before, adopting a low profile. Accordingly, an application was put in on the 1st March for a march through Bethnal Green, to be held on the 11th of the same month. In other words, we had ten days notice to organise a major activity.

Press statements were released and thousands of special leaflets were delivered throughout the East End, with others going out in Bermondsey and Chingford, as well as at West Ham and Chelsea football grounds.

Our teams of leafletters were received like a liberation army in the beleaguered council estates of Bethnal Green, Stepney and Mile End. Gradually the media began to realise that the BNP was, without apology, heavily involved in the 'Rights for Whites' campaign. This time there were no warnings of last-minute bans from the police. Even local Labour MP Peter Shore, in contrast to his reaction to the first march, said that this march should not be banned. Clearly he had detected the breezes of local feeling in the meantime. Equally clearly, the authorities realised that if the white community were not allowed to demonstrate in a legitimate political manner the lid might blow right off. Indeed, the Chief Superintendent of the local police division admitted to Richard Edmonds and myself that he had only just realised what enormous difficulties were involved in policing an area like Tower Hamlets. He was doubtlessly influenced by having one of his WPCs' face slashed open by a knife-wielding Asian a few days earlier.

The East London Advertiser had greeted the news of possible BNP involvement in the first march with the glaring headline 'Fascists bid to hi-jack march'. This time the paper, while still disapproving, was a little more polite towards us, and its pre-march coverage recognised the BNP as the legitimate champion of the white community.

THE BIG DAY

Sunday, March 11th came. Hundreds of East Enders turned out, including members of the families of the victims of recent Asian attacks, along with about 120 (mostly local) BNP members. Together we formed up and marched some 400-strong through the heart of Bethnal Green, with flags waving and banners aloft. As the column marched through the streets, passers-by cheered and clapped. A small crowd of reds congregated at Bethnal Green Town Hall fresh from their rioting in Hackney and still clinging to their anti-Poll Tax placards, but they kept well out of our way!

The march was followed by a short rally, addressed by Richard Edmonds, Dave Bruce and John Tyndall. Leaflets were handed out, hundreds of copies of British Nationalist were sold and countless numbers of stickers were distributed. The meeting ended in great enthusiasm and a quick collection raised £200, which helped to finance the campaign.

The day was an unqualified success for the white community in East London and for the British National Party. The BNP gained excellent media coverage, again being featured on a London TV news report, and the party dominated the local press in the days following. The BNP's East London contact address was again swamped with enquiries and messages of support. Thus Round Two ended as another great victory for the BNP.

After the activity, doubtlessly in an attempt to dampen the enthusiasm of those making their way peacefully home after the march, some police officers, after provoking and abusing local Whites, made a number of arbitrary arrests, including myself. I and others were charged with 'threatening behaviour' for quietly walking down Bethnal Green Road! The result of this false prosecution of myself and up to seven others is not known at the time of this report. It should be emphasised that the police officers responsible were not from the local division, but had been bussed in from outside.

THE COMING ELECTIONS

The London borough council elections are now only a few weeks away. Round Three of our campaign is beginning. Race will be the issue in these elections. Hackney & Tower Hamlets Branch of the BNP will be contesting four wards in Bethnal Green and Stepney. One of these, Spitalfields ward, includes the Brick Lane area, which is known to some as 'Banglatown'. On the day of the 'Rights for Whites' march, the Asians announced that they would be setting up five vigilante groups, each ten-strong, to 'patrol' certain areas in defence against
